12-year study of greater Milwaukee ethnic groups

Protest America
Why protesters call for changes in US law

The number of “justifiable homicides” committed by law enforcement has been on the rise. In 2013 it was the highest number in two decades, even though the US homicide rate dropped. Based on the figures that are reported to the federal government, ProPublica recently concluded that young black men were 21 times more likely to be killed by police than whites.

These events have spurred protests against police shootings all over the country, including Milwaukee. Protestors are calling for changes in police training and local laws, police cameras, and coalitions that span race, ethnicity and political affiliation. Mothers of police shooting victims also call for changes in US law.

Part three: New directions in American ethnicity

Between 2000 and 2012 Urban Anthropology Inc. conducted a study of over 60 ethnic groups in the greater Milwaukee area. The results of this study were published in the 2013 book, American Ethnic Practices in the Twentieth Century: The Milwaukee Study (Lexington Books) by Jill Florence Lackey. This article is the third and final installment on the study findings.

New directions in US ethnicity

What movements are afoot that can strengthen ethnicity? What is still needed?

Strengthening ethnicity through DNA research

DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) was first extracted in 1984 from a mounted quagga, an extinct zebra. Since then, its uses have increased greatly, including DNA studies involving ethnic origins and migrations. Current DNA tests for individuals include Y chromosome, mitochondrial, and autosomal. The Y chromosome is passed from father to son. Daughters do not receive a Y chromosome. Y chromosomal DNA follows the direct paternal line (generally the surname line) indicating an ancestral location and ethnicity of the patriline such as African, Asian, Native American or European. Mitochondrial DNA follows the maternal line in the same fashion, yielding the same types of information for the maternal mitochondrial line.

Autosomal DNA, on the other hand, does not follow any line directly and is a composite of the information on the twenty-two autosomes contributed by both parents from all ancestors. Ethnicity information from autosomal DNA indicates a spectrum of results for the entire individual, not a single identification for one specific line—such as 10 percent African and 90 percent European.

In addition, citizen scientists across the country are managing DNA projects on ethnic and subnational groups and publishing findings on topics such as ancestral origins and population variation. Some have even learned to conduct scientific experiments.

The Melungeons of Appalachia project was an example of an important citizen scientist study. In the past forty years, at least a score of books have been written about a “mysterious” population of dark-skinned Appalachians with uncertain ethnic and racial origins that once lived on mountain ridges in East Tennessee. They’d been tagged “the Melungeons” by neighboring communities. Speculation on the group’s ethnic origins included (among others) Cherokee, Turkish, gypsy, Jewish, Portuguese, and “Black Dutch.” In 2011, a DNA study led by Roberta Estes and Jack Goins helped clear up the mystery. Their backgrounds were primarily Northern European and sub-Saharan African.

What’s needed: Ethnic collaborations

Coalitions of multiple ethnic groups in the US have been slow to develop. There have been efforts across the country to unite people of color under one umbrella (e.g., the Rainbow Coalition of Fred Hampton, and the Rainbow PUSH Coalition of Rev. Jesse Jackson), but few have attempted to unite a wider range of ethnic groups.

Ethnic coalitions—both local and nationwide—could be beneficial on many levels. They could address policies on topics such as immigration, civil rights, and cultural sensitivity in American institutions. They could impede movements that threatened ethnic neighborhoods like they did during the wide-spread movement of ethnic populations due to freeway building and urban renewal. Equally important, they could seek solutions to the more individualistic threats the groups were facing, as found in the Milwaukee study.

The most trying challenge the Milwaukee informants described was passing on traditions to their children. In addition to the dwindling time available to teach children today when both parents were in the workforce, parents were also influenced by more permissive and child-centered approaches to training the young—approaches that put more emphasis on increasingly autonomous children choosing their own paths than following the traditions of past generations.

The US has come a long way from the melting pot manifesto that pressured groups to assimilate to an Anglo American ideal to today’s tolerance for diversity. It is no longer a case of assimilation versus ethnicity but of assimilation and ethnicity. Study findings indicated that the need now is to move beyond merely honoring diversity to the point where American institutions promote ethnic involvement for the wellbeing of the family, the neighborhood, the town, and the nation.
Mothers of police shooting victims gather to demand changes in US law

The “objectively reasonable” standard

The legal standard that authorizes deadly force by law enforcement has its roots in the federal legal system. The Fourth Amendment of the US Constitution states that the government may not detain an individual even momentarily without “reasonable, objective” grounds, with few exceptions. The “objectively reasonable” wording later became the legal standard in Supreme Court jurisprudence.

Tennessee v. Garner

The standard was first used in the 1985 case of police use of deadly force. The US Supreme Court ruled that a police officer could use deadly force if he “has probable cause to believe that the suspect poses a significant threat of death or serious physical injury to the officer or others.” The ruling required the use of force to be “objectively reasonable.”

Graham v. Connor

How this standard would be determined was established in a 1989 case. In Graham v. Connor, the Court stated that an objective reasonableness standard should apply to a free citizen’s claim that law enforcement officials used excessive force in the course of making an arrest, investigatory stop, or other "seizure" of his person. From the law-enforcement perspective, factors taken into consideration included severity of the crime, whether the suspect was resisting or trying to escape and, above all, whether the suspect posed an immediate threat to the safety of officers or others.

One of the problems with the Graham analysis is it essentially banned any second-guessing of the officer’s decision to use deadly force. “Objective reasonableness” has become nearly impossible to tell apart from the subjective snap judgments of police officers.

American courts today nearly always defer to the law enforcement officer’s own personal assessment of the threat at the time.

The future

Demonstrators across the country are calling for reforms that will lead to fewer police shootings—especially of young men of color. While most of the reforms proposed have local applicability only, some groups are also calling for changes in federal law and the “objectively reasonable” standard.

THE OLD BELIEVERS (PIEMULE), 1992

Three documentary films by Czech director Jana Ševčíková are packaged under the title “The Old Believers.” “Piemule” will be shown about a community of ethnic Czechs, descendants of immigrants that came to the Romanian highlands in 1822 and have preserved their language, culture and national identity. Filmed over a ten year period, the movie documents the harsh lives of these isolated people. Living in poverty, in conditions that differ little from their ancestors, they are also forced to live under the brutal dictatorship of Nicolae Ceaușescu.

Long-Lost Voices of the Wisconsin Oneida

In this intimate volume edited by Herbert Lewis, the long-lost voices of Wisconsin Oneida men and women speak of all aspects of life: growing up, work and economic struggles, family relations, belief and religious practice, boarding-school life, love, sex, sports, and politics. These voices are drawn from a collection of handwritten accounts recently rediscovered after more than fifty years, the result of a WPA Federal Writers’ Project undertaking called the Oneida Ethnological Study (1940-42) in which a dozen Oneida men and women were hired to interview their families and friends and record their own experiences and observations.

“My dear Meyer,” chided the old historian, “why should anyone be surprised by shootings at the Tall House? Have you looked into its past?”

The young anthropology intern was more than willing to look. Meyer Hoffmann’s voracious curiosity led him on a course of inquiry about the Tall House, those who’d lived there, and the neighborhood itself. As zealous Meyer uncovered information about the Tall House’s history, he blundered to false conclusions as often as he stumbled onto correct ones. The only thing Meyer knew for certain was that everything about these shootings connected to forced ethnic migrations of the past. Yet no one—not the guests, not the neighbors—acted very concerned about these shootings. After all, weren’t they designed to be victimless? Perhaps, initially. But that changed.

A False Memory

A Tall House series novel

Sienna Jacks

When the family of Leroy Cyrus decided to board him at the sumptuous Tall House, the resident social justice workers didn’t know how to respond. Cyrus, now demented, was once a person of interest in the murder of the best friend of the Tall House’s proprietor, Sherilyn Riddle. She questioned whether it was ethical to interrogate a man with Alzheimer’s disease. One boarder that had no problems with the ethics of this investigation was anthropology student, Meyer Hoffmann. He’d do whatever was necessary to solve this and possibly related murders. But the question was—how can he know if the information he gleaned from Cyrus was true, fabricated, or based on false memories?

New addition to the People of Wisconsin series

Susan Gibson Mikos

In this all-new addition to the People of Wisconsin series, author Susan Mikos traces the history of Polish immigrants as they settled in America’s northern heartland. The second largest immigrant population after Germans, Poles put down roots in the state, from the industrial center of Milwaukee to the farmland around Stevens Point, in the Cut- over, and beyond. In each locale, they brought with them a hunger to own land, a willingness to work hard, and a passion for building churches.

The Old South Side

New addition to the People of Wisconsin series

The Old South Side has always welcomed ethnic groups. In the late 1800s, the area was developed by immigrant Poles who became the dominant population for over 100 years. While other Milwaukee ethnic neighborhoods gradually dissipated in the mid-20th century because of assimilation pressures, freeway building, or urban renewal, the Old South Side remained solidly Polish. A survey nearly a half century later revealed that people of 110 national backgrounds now lived in the area.

A Time of Terror: A Survivor’s Story by James Cameron is the only account ever written by a survivor of a lynching. Thanks to America’s Black Holocaust Museum and its parent organization, the Dr. James Cameron Legacy Foundation, the book is now available again to a general audience. The Foundation has preserved this fascinating out-of-print book by publishing and distributing a revised 3rd edition. This new edition includes five never-before-published chapters, photographs, and information for students and teachers. The Foundation will also properly preserve and store Dr. Cameron’s original manuscript.

American Ethnic Practices in the Early Twenty-first Century: The Milwaukee Study is a work based on a twelve-year research project conducted by Urban Anthropology, Inc. The qualitative study examined current strength of ethnicity and the contributions that ethnic practices have made to the wider society. The work takes a new approach by focusing on ethnic practices. The most prominent findings in the book were the ways that community-building activities of ethnic groups contributed to the wider society, and how this, in turn can help restore a needed balance between individualism and collectivism in the United States.

From heathen to hero: American Indian participation in WWII

Dawn Scher Thomae, Curator of Collections, Anthropology Department, Milwaukee Public Museum

Beyond the Navajo code talkers, little has been written about American Indian participation in WWII. Few authors have explored the motivation for their involvement, especially given their tenuous relationship with the US government. Find out why American Indians joined this war in such great numbers and whether the stereotype of the war-like American Indian had any validity.

Coalition of African Youth

The Coalition of African Youth (CAY) prepares young adults for success beyond the classroom. CAY programming includes youth leadership and employment services. CAY youth also work on large-scale service projects on Martin Luther King Day of Service, Global Youth Service Day, Make A Difference Day, and more. PACA youth painted murals and built benches at Doerfler School for Global Youth Service Day.

Tutoring

PACA works with up to 30 young people each day in after-school and summer programs. More than 100 volunteer tutors help these youth every year. The theme of 2014 was “improvement and results.”

Youth Gardening

In 2013 PACA built a 15-bed organic community garden across from PACA offices. The effort brought together youth, residents, the UW-Cooperative Extension, and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. A weekly learning program taught PACA youth gardening skills and information.
Publisher focuses on ethnic Milwaukee

Presents opportunities for local writers

Milwaukee Ethnic Collection of Arts and Humanities (MECAH Publishing) recently opened in Milwaukee. Its goals are to:

- Interest readers in the cultural diversity of Milwaukee and its surrounding communities.
- Produce products that fit one or more of these arts and humanities: history, anthropology/archaeology, folk art, art history, museums, literature (including poetry and fiction), language, architecture, and religion.
- Target the products to lay audiences of all ages (e.g., non-academic).

Products that relate to urban centers of southeast Wisconsin and highlight cultural diversity will be considered, and can include any of the following:

- Nonfiction books (e.g., small museums in southeastern Wisconsin, the history of Pentecostal churches in Milwaukee).
- Fiction books (e.g., a mystery set in Milwaukee, a book for young people with a local immigration theme).
- Documentaries (e.g., the Irish of southeastern Wisconsin; a reproduction of a play with a Milwaukee theme).

Recent release: Kids in Cultures

Book tells stories of Milwaukee ethnic children of various eras

A work written for children and about children released by MECAH Publishing.

Kids in Cultures is a fully-illustrated book written for students grades 4 through 8. The stories describe life in various cultural groups during salient periods of history in Southeastern Wisconsin. A study guide is included, as the stories teach students about ethnicity in general and ethnic groups in particular. Stories include:

- Life in Great Lakes prehistory
- Current Hmong culture
- A Polish/Mexican exchange in the 1970s
- African American/Jewish life in Bronzeville in the 1940s
- Growing up German
- Urban Indian playtime (Oneida)

Urban Anthropology Inc. introduces the KaTS program “Kids across Time/Space”

The “Kids across Time/Space” (KaTS) program is designed to educate children aged 8 to 12 on the experiences of children in different cultures across different periods of history.

The program includes thirty fully-illustrated stories of ten minutes each of the life of a child in each culture. This is followed by games to help the children retain the information, such as Jeopardy or Bingo. The children also earn craft items (such as charms of the culture being featured) that they will ultimately use in making larger multicultural crafts.

Story settings range from early Medieval China to Renaissance Italy to Puritan Colonial times to Creeks during Indian Removal to Slaves on plantations to Depression farming to today’s Kenyan pastoralists. If you are a school or youth-serving organization and would like this program at your facility, contact Rick Petrie at (414) 271-9417.

Milwaukee Ethnic News

Milwaukee Ethnic News is published bimonthly by Urban Anthropology Inc. and is managed by volunteer anthropologists. The purpose of the newsletter is to offer ethnic organizations and individuals opportunities to share news and information about their cultures. The newsletter does not receive funds from any external source. The editor is Dr. Jill Florence Lackey.

Subscriptions

The newsletter is emailed to anyone wishing to receive it. People subscribing themselves and their friends went from 48 in June, 2012 to over 1,000 currently. If you wish your email or that of a friend to be added to the subscriber list, send the email addresses to JFLanthropologist@sbcglobal.net.

Submitting stories

Milwaukee Ethnic News is interested in stories from individuals, businesses, and organizations that have an ethnic appeal. These can be stories about an immigrant family, special ethnic events, or ethnic issues that need to be aired as guest editorials. Stories that show interethnic cooperation are most welcome.

Stories must be between 100 and 400 words. Some editing will be done to match our style guidelines and spatial constraints. We will write the stories for you if you simply send us a list of the information that you want included. A photo of less than 2 MBs is always required for a story to be published. Please do not refer us to websites to collect information or photos. If we write your story from the general information you send, we do not send proofs for approval.

Stories are always due on the 25th of the month preceding a publication month. At times later submissions may be allowed (ask first). Publication months are July, September, November, January, March, and May. Please send your stories to JFLanthropologist@sbcglobal.net.

Editorials

Milwaukee Ethnic News occasionally prints editorials that deal with controversial topics on ethnic topics. Guest editorials are also welcome, but need prior approval to be published.
